MELVILLE, N.Y., March 19, 2013 /PRNewswire/ -- Henry Schein, Inc. (NASDAQ: HSIC), the world's largest provider of health care products and services to office-based dental, medical and animal health practitioners, today announced that Butler Schein Animal Health, the leading distributor in the U.S. companion animal health market, will be rebranded as Henry Schein Animal Health. The rebranding plan was announced at the Butler Schein Animal Health national sales meeting in Orlando, Fla., and the rebranding process will take place throughout 2013.

"This transition from Butler Schein Animal Health to Henry Schein Animal Health underscores our increasing strength in the global animal health market and our commitment to be a valuable resource to our customers and supplier partners around the world," said Stanley M. Bergman, Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer for Henry Schein. This rebranding preserves the rich heritage of Butler Schein and links our United States operations more closely with our market-leading animal health businesses throughout Europe and Australasia."

Butler Schein Animal Health was created in 2010 through the merger of Butler Animal Health Supply (which included The Butler Company and Burns Veterinary Supply) and Henry Schein Animal Health (which included NLS Animal Health), and immediately became the leading U.S. companion animal health distributor. It represents the largest component of Henry Schein's global animal health business. Henry Schein also is the leading animal health provider in Australia, New Zealand, The Netherlands, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Ireland and the Czech Republic, with operations in Spain, Portugal, the U.K., France and Austria, as well. In addition, Henry Schein is a leading global provider of animal health practice management software solutions.

"As Henry Schein continues to grow our leadership in the global animal health market, it is important that the Henry Schein Animal Health brand is prominent in the world's largest veterinary market – the United States," said Lonnie Shoff, President and CEO, Henry Schein Global Animal Health and Strategic Partnerships. "We are now the leading provider of animal health solutions on three continents. As our brands become increasingly aligned from country to country, we reinforce the strength of the best practices that we share among our operating units around the world."

"This rebranding is another step in the continuing growth and evolution of our company," said Kevin R. Vasquez, Chairman, CEO and President of Butler Schein. "By more closely aligning our organization with the Henry Schein global brand, we are demonstrating that we have the long-term strength of a diversified global partner – a company that truly thinks globally and acts locally to serve our customers.
